Jon P. Anderson, PhD, is a senior research scientist and product manager at LI-COR Biosciences in Lincoln, Nebraska. He has written several research grants and has participated on scientific review committees for the National Institute of Health.

Nisha Avey is a business innovation consultant with the Nebraska Department of Economic Development. Avey administers the Nebraska SBIR/STTR matching grant program, Edward Lowe Economic Gardening, and the Kauffman Foundation Ice House Entrepreneurship Program.

Douglas K. Benn, DDS, PhD, is a professor in the Department of Diagnostic Sciences at Creighton University. Benn, founder of Firefly Health Innovations NE, Inc., is listed as an inventor on several patents. His current research to improve radiographic caries diagnosis was funded with an NIH STTR Phase I grant in 2012 and Phase II in 2014.

Jeffrey D. Hicks, MS, is founder and former CEO of Persistent Sentinel. He led the company from initial startup to a robust company on target to generate a projected $1+ billion in revenue by the end of 2020. He was previously chairman and CEO of 21st Century Systems, leading it to become one of the leading software R&D businesses in Nebraska.

Henry Joseph Runge, JD, engages in technology transfer as the director of business development for UNeMed at the University of Nebraska Medical Center. Runge supports multiple SBIR and STTR applications and has wide experience in the SBIR/STTR process across many agencies.
